Overview

Allison Borkenheim has practiced labor and employment law for more than two decades. Allison has wide-ranging experience managing litigation and developing compliance programs on behalf of employers. She defends employers against claims involving discrimination and harassment, wage and hour compliance, and the California Private Attorneys General Act. Allison also represents employers in whistleblower lawsuits and has conducted high-profile workplace investigations involving members of the c-suite and other executives.

She has experience in front of federal and state courts and administrative agencies, as well as in arbitration and mediation. Allison's clients include multinational corporations, hospital systems, nonprofits, and public entities.

In addition to her litigation practice, Allison provides advice and counseling to clients on a wide range of employment matters.
