Overview

Edward Tsui (pronounced "Choi") is an aggressive litigator and represents employers in all matters related to workers' compensation, as well as Labor Code 132(a) discrimination claims, and serious and willful misconduct claims.

His practice focuses on defending technology companies and gig economy companies on classification issues (i.e. independent contractor vs. employee) that intersect with the workers' compensation arena. Ed also collaborates with Littler attorneys and local counsel throughout the U.S. to protect clients' interests in workers' compensation matters in all 50 states.

Ed has served diverse clients including self-insured Fortune 500 corporations, medium sized businesses, uninsured employers, professional employer organizations (PEOs), national staffing agencies, public entities, and major insurance companies in a variety of industries including:

- Manufacturing
- Hospitality (hotels and restaurant groups)
- Healthcare
- Retail
- E-Commerce
- Cannabis
- Agriculture
- Fashion

- Automotive
- Aerospace
- Real estate
- Transportation and warehousing

Prior to joining Littler, Ed was a managing attorney at his previous firm's Orange County office. He gained extensive experience in workers' compensation litigation including leading more than two dozen bench trials, taking hundreds of depositions of claimants and medical examiners, and submitting appeals to the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board.
