Overview

Hannah Black focuses her practice on labor and employment law matters.

Hannah was previously an associate at a Boston-based boutique litigation firm, where her practice focused on criminal defense, investigations, and professional liability cases. She also spent three years as a prosecutor in the Middlesex County District Attorney's Office, where she directed complex investigations, argued evidentiary motions, negotiated plea deals, and represented the Commonwealth in several district court bench and jury trials.

While in school, Hannah worked within the Boston Police Department's Youth Violence Strike Force to provide prevention, intervention, and advocacy services to young people and their families. She is also a Licensed Clinical Social Worker (LCSW).
