Overview

Joanna Pagán Andréu counsels and represents employers on various issues related to labor and employment law, including claims of wrongful termination, discrimination, harassment, retaliation and other related matters in state courts and administrative agencies.

In 2023, she began her legal career as a law clerk.

While at law school, Joanna served as associate and executive editor for the University of Puerto Rico Law Review, and was later named associate editor-in-chief for the 94th volume of the Law Review. During her third year of law school, she worked at the Legal Aid Clinic, where she gained hands-on litigation experience, assisting on a wide array of civil matters, such as contract, family, and property law.
